that the minds of the people of this part of India, at least, have been expanded & enlarged to the degree that might have been and was contemplated, thro' the instruction & care that has been bestowed on them, - nor has he seen sufficient reasons to indulge a belief or a hope, - that their innate prejudices have been removed or even lessened, or their moral character and sense of Veracity, integrity & proper principle improved - and that whatever system of Education may be enforced hereafter, its chief aim should be directed to moral improvement, combined with extirpating the foul Vices of untruthfulness & dishonesty which are hardly held by the great masses of the people to be a reflection, unless discovered. - Remarks on
